CANNOT FIND HIS FAMILY

Seaman Frey Offers a Reward for Wife and Removed Her Posts From the Schomburgk

man, has offered a reward for information concerning the whereabouts of his wife, Katle V. Frey, and two children, Annie and Bessie, aged, respectively, six and one year. On Sunday, December 29, Mrs. Frey and the two children left the home of her mother, Mrs. Ward, No. 725 Virginia aveabout a month ago the Frey family lived at 900 8th street southeast, but Mr. Frey was away in the government service so much of his time that the wife concluded she would board with her mother, where she would always have company, for her single sisters and brother lived there, and some of them were at home most of the time, and last Sunday the attending physician told the members of the family that she was out of danger. This encouraging news was very acceptable to Mrs. Frey, who had probably fully considered her determination to leave, and, with her mothers er's improved condition, she found no obstacle in her way. In the afternoon she took her little ones and went out, as she said, to give them some fresh air.

The Last Seen of Them. Her sister stood at the front door until Mrs. Frey, pushing a baby carriage and leading Annie, disappeared around the cor-night her husband, who was in Norfolk at the time, was hot!fied, and he directed that the police be requested to assist in the search. The husband reached home Wed-nesday and called on the police. A Reward Offered. Yesterday he inserted in the papers an advertisement offering a reward, as already mentioned. Mrs. Ward, who learned of her daughter's disappearance, is much conduct may result in the mother's death. Mr. Frey received information yesterday New York, and he went there to continue his search. The police are not losing any time looking the case up, for they are satisfied that Mrs. Frey did not go away with only her children. Inspector Hollinberger said this morning that a sailor who had visited the house had also left the city and the probably a decertor and he thinks the is probably a deserter, and he thinks the sailor is able to give information concern-ing Mrs. Frey's whereabouts.

WHEN ENGLAND YIELDED

Line.

What is Said in London of the Recently Published Lord Aberdeen Letters.

A London dispatch, January 3, says: The dispatch to the Daily Chronicle from its special commissioner at Washington, giving litherto unpublished correspondence between the governments of Great Britain and Venezuela during the period between November, 1840, when Robert Schomburgk was appointed to survey the western territory of British Guiana, and April, 1842, when posts which he had set at various points in that territory to form the so-called Schomburgk line, is attracting much attention here.

The Chronicle calls it a "momentous dispatch" and heads it "A New Face to the Controversy; the Schomburgk Line Useless. Some Startling Dispatches." A foreign office official, speaking of these dispatches, in conversation with a representative of the Associated Press, this afternoon, said that the correspondence quoted was correct "so far as it goes." He added "But there is much which is unpublished, especially the letters of Senor Fortique (the Venezuelan minister to Great Britain at the time). These give a different light upon the whole matter. We might, for instance, take portions of Secretary Olney's document and transform it into a statement which would be entirely an-tagonistic to the American side of the Unpublished Correspondence. The dispatch of the Washington correspondent of the London Chronicle gave portions of unpublished correspondence between Venezuela and Great Britain regarding the sentry posts established by Sir Robert Schomburgk on the line marked out by Lord Aberdeen replied to Venezuela' complaint that the demarcation so made was merely a preliminary measure, open to future discussion between Great Britain and Venezi ela.

Senor Fertique, for Venezuela, replied that Sir Robert Schomburgk had planted at the mouth of the Orinoco river several posts. He had also raised the British flag with a show of force, and performed other acts of dominion in Venezuela. Extreme courtesy alone prevented Venezuela from forcibly expelling him from the country.

Lord Aberdeen replied, confirming his previous statement, and adding that much unnecessary inconvenience would result from the removal of the posts, as they would afford the only tangible means by which her majesty's government could be prepared to discuss the question of bounda-ries with Venezuela. The posts were erected for that express purpose, and not, as the Venezuelan government appeared to apprehen1, as indications of dominion and empire on the part of Great Britain. Subsequently, March, 1842, Henry Light, governor of Guiana, sent a note to Daniel

O'Leary, British consul at Caracas, stating that the colonial secretary had ordered the governor to remove the landmarks.

The Chronicle remarks: "If the above documents are genuine, and their source excludes suspicion, the Schomburgk line is proved worthless as a basis of any territorial limit whatever."

Commenting editorially on the subject,

"Clearly there can now be no question re-garding the Schomburgk line as a ramrod thrust between Guiana and Venezuela. In a word, England and the United States have a way out. We look to the statesmen on both sides to enlarge it until there is found complete escape from a situation of the utmost peril."

Cabling later, the Chronicle's special commissioner in Washington adds:

the Chronicle says:

missioner in Washington adds:
"In reply to the criticism that the Aberdeen dispatches I cabled yesterday were not new, I can only say that I did my best during the time at my disposal to test their unpublic character, and failed to trace them anywhere here. They were unknown in detail to those here whose special duty it is to be securated with the cial duty it is to be acquainted with the details of the dispute, obviously unknown to you, and unknown to the American coror the unavoidable conclusions from them. Regarding the criticism that only parts of fore me professed to be complete, and I cabled every salient word. Of course, it is out of my power to discover whether they were complete. The retort is almost too obvious that if they constitute a misrepresentation, let the foreign office pub-lish them complete. Concerning the charge that my dispatches are anti-English, if I understand it aright, I leave my friends and my published books to defend me.
